Dear Sir

I was asked to appear on "The Issue" programme on Thursday, 25 March 2004. I agreed to appear having been assured by Trevor Birney that the interview would be straightforward and for my part non-controversial.

On arriving at the studio I was treated in a very abrupt and off-hand manner and was ushered to the interview table with no briefing from the production team. The interviewer was Ferghal McKinney. He then conducted the interview in an extremely aggressive and bullying manner. On at least three occasions I asked him to allow me to answer his questions as I felt that I was being given no opportunity to speak. His manner was deeply insulting and to my mind extremely misogynistic. When the interview was over I asked Mr McKinney why he had treated me with such anger. In his reply it was clear to me that he and the production team thought that I was "fair game".

As a public servant and as Chief Medical Officer, I recognise the role that the media has to play. However, I do not believe that my treatment by the team on The Issue was acceptable. I have been and remain deeply distressed by the event and feel that I was bullied and harassed.

I have been approached by UTV on numerous occasions in the past 10 years to contribute to various programmes. I believe that I have at all times been gracious and accommodating, often going out of my way to contribute. That relationship has been jeopardised.

I would welcome an explanation surrounding the events of last Thursday. I would also ask for an apology for the dishonesty and lack of integrity of the production team prior to the interview and for the verbal harassment I received from Ferghal McKinney.

Yours sincerely

Dr Henrietta Campbell
