On Thursday 7 June 2001 at approximately 1520 hrs my daughter Raychel, date of birth 04 02 1992 returned from school, St Patricks Pennyburn. Raychel was in good form and just went outside to play as she normally would. She returned to the house again at about 1630 hrs and she was asking when the dinner would be ready as she had what she described as hunger pains in her stomach. At about 1645 hrs we sat down to dinner and Raychel ate as she normally would. Raychel went out to play again. On her return she was complaining that even after her dinner the pains were still in her stomach. Raychel was in and out a few times and I told her to go to the toilet so I thought that may be her problem. When she returned she did not go to the toilet saying that she didn't have to. Again she continued to play but shortly after this she returned again complaining of pain and at this point I decided she should stay in. I would say that at this point it was around 1746 hrs and I made her a bed on the sofa. Raychel stated that the pain was around the area of her belly button. At around 1830 hrs I saw that Raychel was getting very grey about the face and I began to panic and try to contact my husband who had not returned from work. I got Raychel into the car and I went and collected my husband from work and went straight to Accident and

Emergency at Altnagelvin as I was extremely worried about Raychel. At Casualty Raymond, my husband, carried Raychel into the cubicle as we were taken right away. A doctor began to examine Raychel and he stated that it could be a problem with her appendix and he decided to give her some pain relief in the form of an injection. Shortly after this injection she began to brighten up and came back to herself. We arrived at A & E shortly after 1900 hrs. The doctor left us with Raychel and returned a short time later stating that if her pain increased then they would have to open her up and remove the appendix even if it did look healthy and normal as this was procedure. I signed a consent form to allow the operation to go ahead. We waited in A & E for a while until a bed was available in the children's ward and when she was transferred to the children's ward she was still in good form. The doctor that was looking after Raychel in A & E said that it would be the early hours of the following morning before any operation could take place and that an Anaesthetist would have to examine her as well. When Raychel was settled in the children's ward we went home in order to get her some clothes as she was going to be staying. At about 2250 hours and we had only been home about 10 minutes and the hospital rang saying that they needed us to return as they were taking Raychel to theatre. I accompanied Raychel to the theatre and she was still in good form. I asked the nurse why Raychel was going down to theatre so early but I can't remember her reply. I was with Raychel up until she fell asleep and she went in for the operation. A nurse said that Raychel would be back on the ward within the hour, so at 0030 hrs on 08 06 2001 we returned to the Children's Ward waiting on Raychel. Raychel did not return until about 0210 hrs and I questioned a nurse as to the delay before she arrived and all I was told was that they had no word yet. When Raychel returned and were so glad to see her that we didn't ask what the delay had been. At 0600 hrs I left the hospital as Raychel had not wakened and my husband stayed. After a phonecall at about 0900 hrs I returned to see Raychel as she was now awake. Raychel was in bed and colouring in and told me that she had been sick. At about 1200 hrs I took Raychel to the toilet and as she was about to leave the toilet she began to vomit which was in large volume, she was bright red and came out in a cold sweat. She returned to bed and I informed a nurse that she had been sick but the nurse said that this was normal. As the day progressed she became sick more often and at one point she was vomiting bile on the bed and a nurse said that her stomach was now empty and she won't be sick any more. We left the hospital at 1500 hrs and returned at approx 1545 hrs and Raychel appeared listless and was not her lively self. She continually vomited and later in the evening a doctor gave her an injection in her arm to stop her being sick, plus sepositories. Raychel continued to vomit bile and later on it turned to blood and again a nurse said that it was only natural. At around 2130 hrs my husband informed me that Raychel had vomited more blood and she was complaining of a really sore head. A nurse then gave Raychel what I was told was Paracetamol for pain relief. Raychel was bright red in the face. Then after the Paracetamol she continued to throw up, but a while later she settled and fell asleep. I believe that she was very weak. At about 0040 hrs both Raymond and I left advising the staff to ring if she woke up. At 0345 hrs Altnagelvin phoned and said that Raychel was having a seizure. Raymond went to the hospital and I returned shortly after him. Raychel was taken to another room by the staff. I did not see Raychel until about 0450 hrs. In the interim a Dr McCay told Raymond and I that Raychel was seriously ill and when we saw her we were advised that she would be going for a Cat scan. She had the scan and Dr McCay told us that her brain was clear and that if he could get her sodium it would be better. Raychel was not responding to me and did not even know that we were there. Dr McCay said that Belfast had requested another scan and this was done. Dr McCay said that they saw a trickle of blood on the outside of her brain and that once a bed was free Raychel would go to the Royal Victoria Hospital. In the meantime she went to Intensive Care in Altnagelvin. A doctor in ICU with a beard said that she was very seriously ill and that there was a lot of pressure inside her head and that they would operate to reduce the pressure. We were told that it would take a week or two weeks before we knew what was wrong. Raychel lay on the bed lifeless and a priest anointed her. Raychel was taken to the Royal Victoria Hospital but she did not get any better. When we got to the Royal it was about half an hour later, When a doctor said that her brain has swollen to such an extent that there was little they could do and that she was on a life support machine and getting medication to try to reduce the size of the brain and that they had to keep the machine on for a certain period of time by law and then check Raychel the next day before they could switch it off. On Sunday 10 06 01 a doctor advised that Raychel was brain dead and that with my permission they would switch the machine off. I asked if it could be kept on a while longer but the doctor said that there was no point and both my husband and I agreed a few hours later that it should be switched off.
